

Baseball still is the major sport in the heart of the Detroit fan. The faithful began gathering as early as nine o'clock to join the rush for the bleacher seats at yesterday's doubleheader between the Tigers and the Little Brownies. By 10 o'clock most of the parking lots in the vicinity of the stadium were filled.

York looked bad as he tried to surround and capture Mc-Quinn's fly in the fifth inning. Quinns Hy in the little linning. But a fellow who can hit like Rudolph is sure to receive every opportunity to make good as an outfielder. The Tigers are convinced that Rudolph will be a fair to mid-dolph will be a fair to mid-dling fly chaser before the current season is over. He is quite a bit faster than he seems to be.

There's nothing fancy about Col, Gabby Street, the leader of the Little Brownies. He still goes for the old-fashioned red bandana handkerchiefs.

Schoolboy Rowe now is con-vinced that his arm is going to be all right. That doctor he visited down in Pennslyvania recently has down in Pennsiyvania recently has convinced him that everything is hunky dory.

"He found that I twisted a muscle in my shoulder," reported the Schoolboy. "He put it back in place and told me to rest nine days. So that is what I am going to do. I expect to be able to pitch in nine days."

Harry Eisenstat rejoined Harry Eisenstat rejoined the Tigers yesterday looking a little like a guy who has been serving as a sparring partner for Henry Armstrong. He said he feels all right but that his vision still is somewhat impaired because of a blood spot in his right eye. He expects the trouble to clear up within a few days.

Pitchers love to hit and Baron Poffenberger is no exception. Sunday when he was pitching his four-hitter against the White Sox the Baron returned disconsolate from a trip to the plate. Thinking to cheer him up Don Ross said, "Nice pitchin', Poffy?" "Pitchin' my eye," said Poffy. "I go three for the collar at bat today. That guy is the first pitcher who has shut me out this year. And he doesn't have a prayer!" . . .

Greenberg permitted his two strike-outs in the first game to get him down—spiritually. When he hit his home run in the eighth he did not attempt to go to first until he saw the ball drop into the left field stands. He doesn't usually play that kind of baseball.

Vernon Kennedy is scheduled to hurl for the Tigers Wednesday, in the opening game of their series with the Yankees at New York. He will be seeking his eighth consecutive victory.
